

PROF CLARK'S CLOSING TALK

The series of dramatic lectures given by Prof. Clark of Chicago university closed last night before a thronged house, and at the end the distinguished lecturer was warmly congratulated. He was advertised to speak on the poet's hero, King Henry V. of England, and there was much disappointment because the schedule was changed. However, Prof. Clark announced yesterday afternoon the probability of his return later in the year for another series of lectures, and at that time he would give Henry V. The afternoon lecture was devoted to oral expression and literary interpretation, a topic of special interest to teachers, and which was listened to with profit by the many teachers present.

In the evening Prof. Clark gave a dramatic reading of Ulysses, a drama and prologue in three acts, by Stephen Phillips. This dramatic treatment is a masterpiece, and its intrinsic value was well brought out and its beauty displayed with marked effect by the lecturer. In his introductory remarks the professor stated that he did not object at all to applause given for worthy sentiment, but he asked that it be reserved for the close of the lecture. He observed that an interesting lecture might be given on the psychology of applause.

"Taking up the theme of the evening," the speaker said: "We have tonight a character who was tried as no one else is tried in action; and he finally triumphed. The history is the romantic drama of triumphant will. In the final, the gods give opportunity in plenty for choice of action. In the Odyssey, Ulysses is made the architect of his own fate—he is supreme in his will. He was a spiritual and practical success. If at the end of his will had been thwarted, his success would have been achieved just the same. It is marvelous how few of us know the world's greatest epic poem, the Odyssey, and yet it is simpler than Shakespeare. Ulysses was the consummation of wisdom and craft. He was really the head of the movement before Troy."

Prof. Clark sketched the principal events distinguishing the closing of the war, and the scheme of the wooden horse by which entrance was gained to the beleaguered city by the allied forces, and the faithfulness of Penelope, the wife of Ulysses, during all this time was pictured in graphic form. Prof. Phillips' drama is intense in expression and portrayal of thought and sentiment, and while but an epitome of the Homeric work, it groups in compact, striking form the thrilling episodes that mark so vividly the experiences of the Ithacan hero's return to his home, and to the arms of one of the most devoted and faithful wives history or fiction has ever recorded. And this one thing the dramatist has never kept in clear and perspicuous view—this most unusual instance of conjugal fidelity and wife devotion that made even the mere memory of a long absent husband dearer than all the personal, real and financial allurements offered by the throng of princely suitors who thronged the place of Penelope month after month, year after year. Of course, the furnishing of a complete plot relieves a dramatist of an immense amount of effort, but at the same time it places on him the onus of developing the same in artistic dress, conformably to the dramatic unities of time, place and action, and clothed in sentiment and language that will bring out in the most striking and effective manner the underlying spirit and intention of the plot. Prof. Phillips has shown himself in this most dramatic drama, to be a literary artist. In fact, so clearly, so forcibly, and with such literary, such poetic refinement does he portray situations that their spirit may be easily sensed without the spectacular accessories of the stage. In the hands of a trained elocutionist like Prof. Clark the inherent beauties of Prof. Phillips' presentation of the Homeric scheme are brought out so clearly, so vividly, so great Greek poet and his marvelous knowledge of men and effective grouping of events are strikingly brought home to the comprehension of any audience.

Prof. Clark showed his unusual elocutionary powers to marked advantage last night in his dramatic reading of Ulysses, and the concluding passages denoting the riotous action of the suitors in the banquet hall and the sudden appearance and most tragic action of the returning hero in making known his presence, were pronounced in expression of pathos, of action, beauty of sentiment and sublime conception and conclusion of long sustained uncertainty that captivated the large and appreciative audience. Prof. Clark will be a welcome visitor when he comes this way again.

MERGER STORY AGAIN DENIED

W. H. Bancroft, vice president and general manager of the Oregon Short Line, returned this morning from California, where he has been during the past week on a trip in search of rest and recreation. When seen Mr. Bancroft denied any knowledge of the story of the consolidation of the Oregon Short Line and the Oregon Railroad & Navigation company that was sent out by the Associated Press from Ogden yesterday afternoon. That he was suited for president of the merger he declared was all news to him. "You know just as much about it as I do," he declared to the "News." "I simply went to California because I needed a rest. We went over there and had a most enjoyable time. The weather was delightful all the time we were away. I left all business behind me and simply took a holiday."

Mr. Bancroft went on to say that California was filled with easterners who were also in quest of rest and recreation, and that travel was decidedly heavy.

Regarding the story that was printed last evening and which in the main was accepted with a grain of salt in Salt Lake, both President Mohler of the U. S. R. R. and President of the U. S. R. R. are quoted in today's dispatches as knowing nothing of the story and saying that the rumors were without foundation.

General Superintendent E. R. Cady of the Oregon Short Line, who, according to the report, was to be the vice president and general manager of the big consolidation, also was asked about it and said: "I have not heard a word about it and I do not think that there is anything in it."

How would you like to be no, and for your school such champions I can tell you—there's none coming with them. Stanton and Christy and our big Joe, Taylor and Stewart and Lund, you know."

Then followed "The Good Old U. S. A." and the chorus in compliment of the lady players, entitled "The Fair Team."

The audience greatly enjoyed the

CONGRESSMAN SPENCER BLACKBURN, of Wilkesboro, N. C., is one of over fifty members of Congress who indorse the world's catarrh remedy, PERUNA. In a recent letter he says:

"I cheerfully join my friend, Senator Pritchard, in commending PERUNA as a very efficient remedy for coughs, colds and catarrhal troubles. Many of my friends have used it with excellent results."—Spencer Blackburn.

HON. B. J. IRVIN, Mayor of Washington, Ga., in a recent letter to The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, Ohio, says:

"I have frequently used Peruna in my family and have found it an excellent remedy for colds and as a tonic I often recommend it to my friends."—B. J. Irvin.

The politician of all men must needs be in good health and splendid spirits. There is nothing so exhaustive to body and mind as to conduct a political campaign with the spirit and vim, courage and intellect that characterize a political campaign in the United States.

Sometimes these campaigns require the speakers and managers to sleep in a different bed every night, eat at different hotels every day, travel by day and night for many months at a time.

No one can endure this strain without some remedy to protect them from the vicissitudes of the climate. Something to insure good digestion and sound sleep, something to give nerve and brain the invigoration necessary to meet such an extraordinary strain.

PERUNA is the remedy to meet each one of these conditions. Perhaps it would be going too far to say that it is the only remedy that will do this, but at least it is the best known remedy and the best tried remedy and the remedy recommended by the most people as exactly adapted to the exposure and exhaustion incident to campaign work.
